INTRODUCTION

Canadian Studies Directorate

Since its inception in 1984, the mandate of the Canadian Studies Directorate has been to encourage Canadians to learn about Canada.

To this end, the Directorate has addressed four major categories of activity: development, distribution and use of Canadian studies learning materials; encouragement of learning about Canada; investment in the future of Canadian studies; and information on and coordination of federal activities in the field of Canadian studies.

Funding Programs and Content Areas

The Canadian Studies Directorate administers five funding programs designed to support the development of a variety of learning materials, for use at any educational level or for the general public. Three of these programs provide assistance toward the development of print, film and audio-visual, and computer-based or computer-assisted Canadian studies learning materials. Another program supports the development of Canadian studies learning materials for use in open learning and distance education programs. The remaining program encourages greater private sector support for Canadian studies projects through the provision of matching-dollar funding.

The Directorate's commitment to learning materials, however, extends beyond the funding of Canadian studies materials in a very general sense. As a result of regular review and assessment, the Directorate identifies specific content areas considered to be underdeveloped or neglected in the field of Canadian studies. Projects submitted to the Directorate must address one or more of the designated content areas in effect at that time. Since 1984, a compendium of content areas have been identified, from Canadian social, political, cultural and economic studies to literacy, citizenship participation and media literacy. Learning materials dealing with Canadian sovereignty issues and science in a Canadian context have been strongly encouraged as well.

Nevertheless, the needs of Canadians and the priorities of the Directorate and the Department of the Secretary of State continue to change. Of necessity, content areas are adjusted to respond to these changes. The current content areas are as follows:

- The Uniqueness of Canadian Society
- The Media in Canadian Society
- Canadian Comparisons
- Canada in the World

Decisions

This publication presents projects that were supported by the Canadian Studies Directorate from 1984 to 1989. It includes projects that appeared in the previous edition of Decisions, as well as those funded since the appearance of that publication in 1988.

Consequently, the scope and nature of projects described in this publication do not necessarily represent current funding policies and priorities mentioned above. Rather, our objective in issuing a second edition of Decisions — as with the first — is to promote the learning materials realized as a consequence of our funding, as well as the work of the Directorate over the past six years.

Other Activities

In addition to administering its funding programs, the Directorate works with other federal, provincial and territorial departments and private agencies to promote and animate Canadian studies activities. For instance, the Directorate cooperates with the Department of External Affairs to encourage the development of Canadian studies abroad. It also provides program funding to the Association for Canadian Studies to further its mandate in Canada.

The final section of this publication describes some of these activities, including the production of such publications as the Canadian Studies Resource Guide series, the About Canada series, and the Canadian Studies Directories.

Aboriginal Peoples and Constitutional Reform

Institute of Intergovernmental Relations, Queen's University

A series of papers, in three parts, focussing on the constitutional reform process as it relates to Aboriginal peoples and the goal of Aboriginal self-government. The papers analyze different models and relevant international experiences, and explore the issues involved in entrenching and implementing the right to Aboriginal self-government in the Constitution. The series also examines the practical problems of designing mechanisms, and negotiating and enforcing agreements.

Achimoona

Maria Campbell

Achimoona means "stories" in Cree. This illustrated anthology of Native writing explores the function of a key figure in Native society, that is, the storyteller as teacher, healer, historian and cultural custodian. It attempts to illuminate for Native and non-Native students an important aspect of Native culture and societal structure. Its unique contribution to Canadian cultural studies is in the introduction, which explains the key role and responsibility of the storyteller in Native culture.

L'aventure des nouveaux mondes

Jean-Louis Robichaud

A collection of activities placing Canadian — particularly Acadian — society in its historical context. Students will study the context that permitted the French to establish themselves in what is today known as Acadia, and explore the importance of technological change to the ever-adapting Acadian society. The role of Native people and immigrants is also explored to allow students to grasp the contribution made by these people to Canada. The activities are suitable for use in social studies courses in grades four through six.

Children's Political Plays

The Green Slime Affair

Save Our Playground

A Peaceful Life

Ken Osborne, Karen Botting, John Seymour and Richard Swyston

Three children's plays on political education for classroom use at the elementary school level. The plays are designed to give students some firsthand knowledge of and experience with the key words which form the basis for understanding the political process. The overall objective is to introduce students to the processes and dynamics of politics by using everyday contexts. The particular concepts emphasized are conflict of ideas and interests, influence, power, and decision-making.

Consumer Behaviour in Canada: Concepts and Management Action

Gurprit Kindra, Michel Laroche and Thomas Muller

A text which provides insight into the consumption behaviour of Canadians while taking into account the Canadian realities of ethnicity, class and family structure. To illustrate and organize the fundamental concepts discussed, the chapters have been arranged according to a central diagrammatic model of the Canadian consumption decision process. University and college students, marketing managers and corporate personnel and consumer policy makers will find the analysis useful.

Discovery of the North: The Exploration of Canada's Arctic

Daniel Francis

A fascinating story of the golden age of Arctic exploration. The book tells the story of exploration in the Arctic from the voyages of Martin Frobisher in the 1570's to the final assertion of Canadian sovereignty in the area during the 1920's. It is an account of how the Canadian North came to be mapped and legally defined. The book is aimed at high school, university undergraduate and adult audiences.

Energy

Rosemary Neering

An illustrated, introductory text on the subject of how energy is consumed, produced, conserved, wasted, and transported in Canada. The production of energy is examined in both historical and thematic contexts. Energy sources are grouped in such categories as fossil fuels, electricity, nuclear power, and future fuels. Within each category, the narrative deals with how fuel is extracted using case studies of Canadian projects. Trends in energy consumption and conservation are discussed and students are advised on how to conserve energy and develop good conservation habits. The book is designed for students in grades 8 to 11.

Explorations: My Canadian Friends

Carol Langford and Chuck Heath, general editors

A series of six full-colour community booklets designed for national use in the elementary schools. The books illustrate different community types: inner city communities, suburbs, rural towns, acreage developments, farming areas and isolated outposts. A child narrator is identified for each community chosen and the story is told from a first person point of view. Five key concepts are implicit in each book: lifestyle, space, population density, privacy and friendliness. The connection between the student books and the curriculum is made explicit in the accompanying Ideas Book prepared for each student book.

Feminist Marxism or Marxist Feminism: A Debate

Pat Armstrong, Hugh Armstrong, Patricia Connelly and
Angela Miles, with an introduction by Meg Luxton

Articles in this collection present readers with an overview of several key debates in feminist theory — especially on domestic labour — and show the consequences of different analytical perspectives. All the articles address the relationship between feminism and Marxism, asking to what extent Marxism in general, and the domestic labour debate in particular, help us understand the oppression of women in capitalist society. This short collection provides a succinct introduction to the Marxist /feminist debate, and outlines the beginning guidelines for a more expanded study.

Free Trade and the Future of Women's Work

Marjorie Griffen Cohen

A book addressing the issue of how women's work will be affected by the Free Trade Agreement (FTA) between Canada and the United States. The study looks at the two major sectors of the Canadian economy, manufacturing and service, where women's work is concentrated, and explains how the FTA will have a dynamic effect on women's work in this country. The book is suitable for university and college level courses.

From Consent to Coercion: The Assault on Trade Union Freedoms

Leo Panitch and Donald Swartz

A book outlining the history of relations between trade unions and the Canadian government from the late 19th century through to the present day. The book's main emphasis is on the post-Second-World-War period, charting the shift from voluntary consent to coercive action in the relationship between trade unions and the state. In particular, the study highlights the gradual restriction of collective bargaining rights enforced at both the provincial and federal levels since the mid-seventies.

Labrador Studies

Tim Borlase, Program Coordinator, Labrador East Integrated School Board

A learning program of print and audio-visual materials focussing on Labrador for use in social studies classes from kindergarten through grade nine. For students in kindergarten through grade three, full-year programs focus on components of Labrador family and community life, helping them develop values and skills which will lead to effective citizenship. The elementary programs are six to eight weeks in length. They define Labrador historically, and outline students' role in their community, province and country. The six- to eight-week intermediate programs deal with the founding peoples of Labrador — the Settler, the Innu and the Inuit — to give an understanding and appreciation of other cultures. The intermediate programs can be taught in the Inuktitut language.

Land and Community: Crisis in Canada's Countryside

R. Alex Sim

An exploration of the transformation of rural culture and the deterioration of the quality of country life, including the ideas of rural life, land and community, and ultimately appraisal of these concepts in the context of modern Canada. The analysis is critical of the institutions and professions claiming to serve the non-urban population, but avoids blind nostalgia by recognizing the potential for a new community and suggesting possibilities for rejuvenating rural community life in the future. The book is written for university students as well as members of the rural community.

Women, Class, Family and the State

Varda Burstyn and Dorothy E. Smith, with an introduction by Roxanna Ng

Articles in this book begin from a concern to understand the relationship between patriarchy and capitalism and a desire to come to grips with the dissatisfaction many women feel despite the rhetoric of sexual equality which has become commonplace. Dorothy Smith examines the changing relations between the family and the economy in the context of the capitalist mode of production. Burstyn traces the history of the sexual division of labour in precapitalist societies and shows how in industrial societies the state becomes the expression and enforcer of masculine domination.

The World of Tomorrow: A View of Canada in 1939

Robert M. Stamp

A social history of one notable year in Canada's past. The book captures a future briefly glimpsed by Canadians in the year 1939, between the end of the Depression and the onset of the Second World War. The author presents events such as the discovery of the Turner Valley oil field, the forming of the National Film Board and the advent of Trans-Canada Air Lines as examples of events which shaped Canada's future, recapturing the social, political and cultural events of the period in a captivating and illuminating manner. The book is aimed at senior high school, first year post-secondary and adult students.

Le Canada, espace boréal

Paul Villeneuve and Jean Bernard Racine

A general geography text exploring Canada in the world from the point of view that the interaction of internal spatial structures has played a role in the emergence of distinctly Canadian social, cultural and economic forms. The text will explore such spatial structures common to Canada as east-west, north-south and urban-rural gradients and examine the way in which these factors combine to create distinct regions. The text will further consider the effect of recent developments in such areas as telecommunications and foreign investment on these geographic relationships. The French text, which forms part of the 10-volume series, Géographie Universelle, will be suitable for undergraduate use and will be published in 1991.

It's About Learning

Frontier College

An introduction to the Student Centered Individualized Learning (SCIL) approach to adult education developed by and used in all Frontier College programs. The video examines the process of establishing and operating an adult literacy program, and demonstrates the success of the SCIL method as an alternative or supplement to mainstream basic education. The booklet discusses the updated SCIL philosophy and its new directions as it evolves to accommodate new learning programs. Both are targeted to individuals interested in establishing adult literacy programs.

Replanting the Tree of Life

David Leach, Asterisk Film and Video Production

A stimulating look at trees and forests that acknowledges the importance of trees not only to the environment but also to Canadian culture, religion, industry, the economy, and, perhaps most importantly, to the future. The film discusses the worldwide use of trees, the threat of deforestation and some aspects of silviculture, the science of forest management. Finally, it brings these many aspects of trees into the concept of "The Tree of Life" — an enduring symbol for the natural environment — and stresses the importance of living in balance with nature.

Canada in the Twentieth Century: A Video Encyclopedia

CAL Associates, National Film Board, National Archives, and
Secretary of State of Canada

A collection of film and video images reflecting Canada during the twentieth century for use as supplementary material for Canadian studies at a grade-ten level. The video collection will contain still pictures, political cartoons and sound recordings, and will provide Canadians with a better perception of our modern socio-cultural, scientific, technological and political history. Further, the collection will contain an extensive cross-referencing system, as well as a complete list of film and video documents for in-depth study. The mini-documentaries will appear in French and English as required by the subject matter.

A five-hour introductory demonstration module covering 1900 through 1939 will be available in both videocassette and interactive videodisc format in fall 1991. The module for classroom and public library use will be packaged with a bilingual utilization guide, time lines and an annotated, alphabetical and subject index.

Computers in Law-Related Education

Faculty of Education, University of British Columbia

Computer-assisted materials produced by the Law-Related Education Project, provide alternative instructional approaches to supplement classroom teaching, curriculum enrichment and remedial work for students.

Computer-Assisted Lessons in Law-Related Education

Eleven lessons on aspects of federal and provincial law cover three general areas: contract law, consumer rights and responsibilities concerning the sale of goods; civil rights and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms; and select areas of law (landlord/tenant relations, criminal law, tort law, and family law). These English programs have been field-tested in high schools, and are for use in law and consumer education classes.

Data Bases

Two data bases established on the UBC mainframe computer for use as a teacher's resource. The BC Teachers' Directory lists the teachers who can be contacted through the UBC electronic mail system, "MESSAGE." The Law Resources Data Base, containing law-related educational resources, allows the user to call up specific information, such as authors or particular areas of law. Canadian teachers who have access to electronic network systems can reach the UBC Computing Centre and use these data bases. The information contained in the English data bases is continually updated.

The Vision and the Game: Making the Canadian Constitution

Lenard Cohen, Patrick Smith and Paul Warwick,
Simon Fraser University

A series of six video programs telling the dramatic story of how a made-in-Canada Constitution was finally achieved. It features interviews with key participants including many federal and provincial cabinet ministers. Segments from House of Commons debates, news footage and commentary are used to explore the issues and events surrounding this historic transition. The series is aimed at distance-education students and the general public.

The Country in Question

This program reviews the constitutional dilemma in Canada, the series of failures to reach accord between federal and provincial governments, and the increasing bitterness in federal-provincial relations. It details a fortuitous but critical sequence of events that culminates with Trudeau's return to office and his subsequent attempt to resolve the constitutional question.

Playing the Unilateral Card

This program covers federal-provincial meetings and House of Commons debates of the summer of 1980. It focusses on the failure of key players to reach an agreement and the Liberal decision to unilaterally patriate the Constitution with an amending formula and a Charter of Rights (i.e., without provincial agreement).

From the Commons to the Courts

This program picks up the debate in the House of Commons as it resumes in the winter of 1981. The focus of the program is the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and the concurrent action of several provinces in appealing the constitutionality of the government's actions to the courts.

One Last Chance

This program begins with the Supreme Court's ruling on the unilateral action of the federal government: the government's action was legal, strictly speaking, but substantial agreement with the provinces would be more desirable. This decision threw the issue back into the political arena and led directly to the federal-provincial conference in November 1981.

Breakthrough to an Accord

This program covers the dramatic and exciting events of November 4-5, 1981, when, to the surprise of almost everyone, agreement was finally reached — literally overnight. Through interviews with key participants, the sequence of events leading to the breakthrough is reconstructed.

Achievements and Expectations

This program examines the constitutional accord that was finally achieved and concludes with retrospective evaluations from a range of participants and observers on just what was achieved in the whole process and what remains to be done.

Heritage Minutes/Les minutes du patrimoine

Groupe de recherche sur les jeunes et les médias

A feasibility study for the production of short television messages that will foster young Canadians' interest and pride in their cultural past. Research was conducted into young Canadians' perceptions about history and heritage, their receptivity to the brief "public interest" format of the messages, and their television-viewing habits. A pilot message, The Underground Railroad, and two scenarios, Jacques Plante and Valour Road, were used in a series of interviews in five Canadian cities. The final report draws certain conclusions about the potential impact of the proposed messages on young people's awareness of their history and heritage.

Margaret Laurence Lectureship

Trent University

An annual lecture in honour of Margaret Laurence, former Writer-in-Residence and Chancellor of Trent University. Each year a lecturer in one of four fields of Canadian women's involvement — literature, feminism, ecology and peace — is invited to speak at the university. Adele Wiseman gave the inaugural lecture in March 1988.

Scènes de la vie quotidienne : Le métro

L'Agence canadienne de développement du sous-titrage in collaboration with le Service de l'éducation des adultes de la Commission des écoles catholiques de Montréal

A pilot project using television and video to teach reading and writing in literacy classes. The 27-minute video links images, sound and writing for those who can distinguish words and construct simple sentences. By focussing on daily problems such as using public transportation, the materials will help literacy students better integrate themselves into a world dependent on the written word. Copies of the video and teacher's guide are not available for distribution as only a master copy of the video was produced.

OTHER ACTIVITIES OF THE CANADIAN STUDIES DIRECTORATE

About Canada Series

A collection of bilingual booklets to introduce the reader to specialized themes considered to be important to Canadian identity and cultural sovereignty. Each part of the series deals with the country and its people and seeks to promote a broader understanding of Canada. The booklets are written by acknowledged experts under the auspices of the Association for Canadian Studies for the Canadian Studies Directorate and contain maps, charts, graphs, photographs, and a bibliography. The About Canada series is designed for use by teachers, students and the general public. Six titles have been released.

The Aging of the Canadian Population

Neena L. Chappell

An overview of Canadian seniors, from their demographic characteristics — sex, marital status, income, and ethnicity — and health status, to the social roles and social programs that have developed for them. The booklet examines the patterns of change in seniors' relationships with family and friends and discusses the response of the Canadian health care system and community social services to Canada's aging population.

Canada and the Pacific Basin

Gérard Hervovet

An exploration of Canada's relationship with the countries of the Pacific basin. Since World War II the region has become strategically, economically and diplomatically more important to Canada, but not without new obstacles to international understanding. Within the context of the past and the options for the future, the text highlights the difficulties that Canadian policies must address in the region.

The Canadian North and its Conceptual References

Louis Edmond Hamelin

An introduction to the concept of nordicity or the quality of northernness as it applies to Canada. The text explores nordology, or the study of the cold regions in northern latitudes, and demonstrates how older Western civilizations have had direct and indirect influences in North America. It further defines the northern zone and the measurement of nordicity and discusses intellectual nordicity and its development.

Work and Unions in Canada

Bryan D. Palmer

An overview of the importance of paid work to women and men in Canada. The book describes how work defines Canadians, their concerns and their world outlook. It further discusses unionized labour which has represented only a minority of paid workers but nonetheless has been central in revealing the discontent of workers.

The Face of the National Capital

John H. Taylor

A study of urban development using Ottawa as its model. The book incorporates geography, history and sociology not only to tell the story of the national capital, but also to illustrate the development of an urban centre which accommodates both local and national demands.

Innovation in Canada

Yvonne Van Ruskenveld

A study of the importance of innovation. After introducing Canadian innovations (from pabulum to kerosene) and innovators, the booklet concentrates on the economic importance of innovation to Canada and on the relationship of research and development to economic growth. The cooperative roles of industry, universities and government, as well as the potential social impact of innovation, is also discussed.

These volumes are bilingual, and are available free of charge from the Canadian Studies Directorate.

Canadian Studies Directories

Directory of Canadian, Québec and Regional Studies in Canada

The Directory of Canadian, Québec and Regional Studies in Canada, a co-venture with the Association for Canadian Studies, describes the multitude of activities which characterize Canadian studies in Canada and is intended to be an aid in communication and consultation among the various organizations, centres and programs active in the field of Canadian studies. The guide is bilingual.

A Directory to Funding Sources for Canadian Studies

A Directory to Funding Sources for Canadian Studies identifies federal and provincial government as well as private sector sources of funding in Canada for activities in Canadian studies, including educational exchange programs. Guides are available in both English and French.

These volumes are available free of charge from the Canadian Studies Directorate.

Canadian Studies Resource Guides

A series of resource guides on various topics in the field of Canadian studies which is intended to address an identified lack of readily accessible resource information. The guides introduce the reader to the following topics:

Multiculturalism in Canada

Jean Burnet

Canadian Economics

Roger Dehem

Canadian Literature in French

René Dionne

Canadian Government and Politics

Robert J. Jackson

Canadian Literature in English

Bruce Nesbitt

Canadian Geography

Paul Villeneuve

Canadian History

P.B. Waite

Open Learning and Distance Education in Canada

Open Learning Agency of British Columbia

Each booklet in the series is written by a distinguished writer in the field and includes an introductory overview of the subject, a commentary on significant works, suggestions for further readings, a listing of relevant resource guides, finding aids and scholarly journals, microfilm, audio-visual and computer-based sources, and ordering information.

The series is bilingual and is available free of charge from the Canadian Studies Directorate.

Association for Canadian Studies

Since 1978, the Canadian Studies Directorate has provided program funding for the Association for Canadian Studies (ACS) in support of its central functions. The ACS is a pan-Canadian, non-profit organization which seeks to promote knowledge of Canada through the teaching, research and publication of material on Canada. Although its primary interest remains at the post-secondary level, the ACS maintains ties with all levels of education, from primary school through adult education. The ACS actively promotes multi-disciplinary and comparative perspectives and encourages exchanges and cooperation between the numerous programs, centres, study groups, institutes and other organizations working in the fields of Canadian, Québec and regional studies.
